Mr. Nickerson

Weekly work-schedule for computer-lab classes (Mr. Nickerson)

The classes using computers in the Blanchet lab are based on copyright-protected software and daily lessons. Students complete exercises and work on projects in the lab. Take-home work is not part of these curricula, although students are expected to use what they learn on other assignments. In general, this is what the student can expect:

Period 1 (keyboarding) -- Each day, you will have a practice exercise that will likely take the entire period. If you finish early, there are a number of "just-for-fun" programs which you can select from, designed to improve your keyboarding skills. Once a week, we will take a short speed-test. You are encouraged to practice the speed drills if you have extra time after completing your daily exercise. If you miss a day or two, you will not be required to make up the daily exercise, since ensuing exercises will give you plenty of practice on whatever new keyboard reaches we will have learned.

Period 2 (Introduction to Programming) -- The bulk of the work in this course is based on programming projects, which take three or four weeks to complete. If you miss a day or two, I will go over any new information that may have been introduced. I will spend one-on-one consultation time to catch you up, if necessary. In the event of longer absences, we will arrange a mutually-agreeable schedule for project completion if that proves necessary.

Please feel free to contact Mr. Nickerson by email (dbnickerson@q.com) if you have any questions or concerns.
